Welcome to another edition of the Bob Cats Newsletter. It's night time in the big city. A small group of theatre-goers' pouring out in the street, quiet and wistful buttoning up their overcoats in dire need of a drink or two maybe three, heading for the Black Swan. Backstage of The Catacombarium Theater, in a sour ambience of a former coal cellar, beneath sewer pipes and ventilation shafts cracked actor Cornwell's on a stool facing a mirror, taking off his make-up, regaining his breath, getting his bearings, feet peeping out of his Kean shoes. The light flickers as the last lines of The Ghost Of Edmund Kean still resound in his head on repeat... O God, I am dying. Speak to them, Charles... the rest of the cast, Ethel Waters, playing Charlotte Cox, a lean, loose-jointed red-hed in a flowered gown's devouring a grilled chicken, intermittently gulping down red wine from a drinking glass beside him. Zid the Kid in the role of the son, Charles Kean, is changing into his bellboy suit redo for the night shift at The Saint James Hotel. The black dog's in the corner chewing on a second-hand shoe. It's a one week running show only. The sewage system rumbles as a street car named Bouquiniste Row goes by above on Main Street with Charles and Lambert, traveling salesmen in cutlery and glassware out of Albertsville ready for a breather, chilling with their city ladyfriends respectively before the spring tour starts.

PHOTO OPPORTUNITY

FLASHES FROM THE PAST

I'm staring out the window
Of an ancient town
Petals from flowers
Falling to the ground
Beyond the horizon,
in the springtime or fall
Love waits forever,
for one and for all

I lost my true lover
In the dusk, in the dawn
I have to recover
Get up and go on
Beyond the horizon,
beyond love's burning game
Every step that you take,
I'm walking the same

Slipping and sliding
Too late to stop
Riding and gliding
It's lonely at the top
Beyond the horizon,
the sky is so blue
I've got more than a lifetime
To live lovin' you

The morning sun is rising
On the whole human race
I'm right out of prison
I put on my good face

I'm roaming the meadows
I'm barefoot in pain
I'm trampling on shadows
I have no shame

My boots and sombrero
My saddles and spurs
If I die tomorrow
Everything will be hers

(Beyond The Horizon)

GOOD NIGHT

The higher being that we worship

The lower being of ourselves

In warfare and in courtship

Calling lady Ghislaine and her elves

Evil's lurking in the crannies of your mind

Fair is good and Themis' blind
